BC Business Website Terms of Use

1. Operator and website

Example Cedar Office Ltd, of 100 Example Way, Victoria BC, operates https://example.com. The proposed effective date is 2026-11-16. The website provides: Information about ordinary office organization services and how to contact the business. Questions about these terms can be sent to contact@example.com. These terms concern use of the informational website only and do not set the terms of a purchase, professional engagement or subscription.

2. Read these terms

Please read these terms before using the website. Whether a particular term forms a binding agreement depends on its presentation, notice, assent and applicable law. Publication of this page alone is not a guarantee that every visitor has agreed. Where affirmative agreement is required for a particular interaction, the operator must establish a suitable separate process before relying on it.

3. Permitted use

Visitors may access the public pages for lawful information about the business and may keep a reasonable personal reference copy. This permission does not transfer ownership of content or authorize resale, misleading republication, impersonation, interference with access controls or disruption of the website. Any further use of protected material requires permission or a lawful exception.

4. Content ownership and third-party material

The operator retains only the rights it actually holds. Identified third-party material remains subject to its owner's rights and any stated licence. Nothing here removes statutory exceptions or grants rights the operator cannot grant. Concerns about specific material can be sent to the contact above with the page address and a description of the concern.

5. Information and separate engagements

Website information may change and may not address a visitor's circumstances. Visitors should confirm material details directly before making a decision. The website does not itself create a regulated professional-client relationship, a promise to accept an engagement or a warranty about a third party. Any service engagement requires its own applicable terms. This clause does not excuse misleading statements or remove mandatory rights.

6. Enquiries and privacy

Do not send confidential or sensitive material through a general enquiry unless suitable handling arrangements have first been confirmed. The separate privacy notice is at https://example.com/privacy. That notice must reflect actual information practices; these terms are not a substitute for it or for any legally required consent. Sending an enquiry does not authorize unrelated marketing.

7. Links and website availability

Links to external resources are provided for reference. A link alone does not mean that the operator controls or endorses the resource. The operator may maintain, correct or withdraw website material. No promise of uninterrupted access is made. Nothing in this section purports to exclude liability or remedies that cannot lawfully be excluded.

8. No broad waiver

This draft contains no compulsory arbitration, class-action waiver, visitor indemnity or monetary liability cap. It does not restrict complaints to a regulator, lawful proceedings or rights under mandatory consumer, privacy or other legislation. Any tailored allocation of risk needs separate review for the actual website and audience.

9. Changes and contact

Changes should be published with their actual effective date and an appropriate notice process. A later version does not automatically rewrite an earlier transaction or create retroactive assent. The operator should retain prior versions and check whether a material change requires new agreement. Contact contact@example.com with questions. British Columbia law applies subject to mandatory applicable law and any court jurisdiction that cannot lawfully be displaced.
